

Good Practice: Social Media Spy

Provided by: Click F1

21st Century Skill connected: Critical thinking, growth mindset and communication

How this good practice works:

Participants take on the role of employers, selecting the best candidates for various jobs using fictitious characters and their profiles, including resumes and (simulated) social media platforms, to determine suitability based on skills, experience, and personality.

The task involves collectively selecting the right candidates based on their profiles, constructing one or two profiles deemed suitable for available positions, emphasizing collaboration and thoughtful consideration of character attributes.

How this solves problems and/or stimulates social vocational skills:

Social Media Spy is about personal leadership. With the game users are invited to engage in conversation about what this means. By being put in the role of employer they have to be critical of who they hire. If they do not, they lose the game.

How this good practice matches with the connected 21st Century Skills:

Critical thinking, the users develop questions, make connections and evaluate information. Growth mindset, the users self-regulate emotions and try to objectively view all the information.

Communication, the users learn about digital communication and what impact it has on applying for a job.
